The Science of Cold Sculpting Fat Bulges

Cold Sculpting refers to the CoolSculpting procedure. This is a revolutionary treatment that uses exclusive freezing technology to reduce fat. Cryolipolysis is an advanced cooling technology. When broken down, cryo + lipo + lysis translates into cold-induced + fat cell + death and removal. Cold Sculpting works because fat cells are not tolerant of freezing temperatures like skin cells.

How Does Cold Sculpting Work?

When a stubborn bulge of fat is cold sculpted during a CoolSculpting treatment, the fat cells become hard and brittle. Skin cells and surrounding tissue remain unaffected. These fat cells permanently freeze to death. This process causes the fat cell's membrane to rupture, leaving the fat cell unable to do its job correctly. When this happens, the fat cell can no longer do its job. When this occurs, the cell will process out of the body as waste.

Cold Sculpting for Long Lasting Fat Reduction

Fat reduction treatments like CoolSculpting or the surgical liposuction option should never be confused with your typical weight loss treatment. During weight loss, fat cells will release its stored fat. The cell does not become damaged, and it stays well within the body. In a sense, during weight loss, the fat cell simply shrinks. If the person losing weight begins to gain the weight back, the cell will start to re-expand and hold more fat.

When you look at fat reduction treatments like Cold Sculpting, the fat cells are destroyed. The cell is exposed to a freezing temperature where it will freeze to death and rupture. Once it processes out of the body, the cell can never regrow or re-expand, as we see they can do with weight loss. This is why Cold Sculpting provides such long-lasting results, unlike weight loss treatments.
