What is Microneedling? Non-surgical Facial Rejuvenation

Microneedling is a non-invasive skin treatment that rejuvenates the face, neck, and chest area (also known as the décolletage.) The advanced cosmetic treatment renews and repairs the skin by triggering cellular turnover, tissue remodeling, and the production of collagen. The result is a healthier, fresher, more radiant complexion that helps you look younger and more energized.

Read on to learn what Microneedling is good for and discover if this cosmetic treatment is right for you.

Microneedling Before and After

What is Microneedling able to do for the skin and complexion? To find out, look no further than before and after images. These pictures demonstrate the amazing rejuvenation that is possible with this popular facial.

What is the Microneedling Treatment Like?

Microneedling is a facial. It uses a hand device equipped with microscopic needles that is passed over the skin. These needles penetrate your skin to trigger a "controlled wound response." The pricks are superficial injuries, and there is little to no downtime required. Though the pricks do not damage your skin, they do stimulate a healing cascade within the tissue. This includes cellular renewal, tissue remodeling, and the production of collagen and elastin.
